UMC breaks ground for residence hall

By Krista Lemos on Monday, October 3, 2005

The University of Minnesota, Crookston (UMC) held a ground breaking for Centennial Hall, an 84-bed residence hall on the campus. The project consists of a two-story residential building with apartment-style living. A commons area will join the new residence hall to Westside apartments and house residential life offices, student lounges, and multipurpose meeting space for both buildings.

Dignitaries taking part in the ground breaking ceremony held on September 30 were University of Minnesota Regent Clyde Allen, UMC Chancellor Charles H. Casey, Representative Bernie Lieder, along with Vice President for University Services Kathy O'Brien, Kerry Peuser, project architect, and Pam Holsinger-Fuchs, UMC's vice chancellor for student affairs and enrollment. The groundbreaking took place in conjunction with the dedication of the new student center at UMC on September 30.

The residence hall at UMC, dubbed Centennial hall, is aptly named since the campus celebrating its centennial this year. The project follows the completion of a new student center that opened in June. Occupancy of Centennial Hall will take place in the summer of 2006.
